There is nothing left unattended to: and the student acts for himself. But, he is often told, that, to be a lawyer, he mast read, and rely on the books for himself; and upon which he is examined every Saturday; and every Saturday too, he exercises himself in court; the records of which are as neatly kept, as any in this country; and every part explained from the inst process, to the conclusion of the judgment, as, well as every species of execution which follows afterwards: so that the student has five days in the week to read without interruption. If assistance like this be of any service to the student at law, he may receive it, at Needham, where, there is no species of vice to draw his attention from it. The juvenile part of the bar or the student of Law, who want such assistance can receive it there, for the remainder of the serion, upon much better terms, for them than for their friend,

FROM SMYRNA.

Boston, August 19.—Smyrna letters to the 5th June, and papers to the 19th May, were received yesterday by the Sultana, last from Candia. The latter gives numerous accounts of detentions and robberies of neutral vessels, particularly those of France, England and Austria, by Greek cruizers, (some of them described to be large vessels); and that the squadrons of those nations had frequent and bloody contests with them, in protecting the commerce of their respective countries, recovering plundered property, and in the destruction of the picaroons. The following articles afford a sample of the vexations to which neutral commerce is subject in those seas.

"APRIL 25. The French brig Americ et Albine, from Tripo'i, in Barbary, being on the 1st of April in the waters of Zea, was visited by a Greek schooner, which carried her into the desert cargo under the pretext of its being Turkish property. The Greeks also possessed themselves of what money they could find, as well as her provisions and a part of the clothes of the crew and of a Turkish passenger. The robbers returned a few Mr. Miller, (a Vermonter,) had arrived at Smyrth and the country of the country a Turkish passenger. The robbers returned a few twenty franc pieces to the proprietor, M. "On the 4th April while still in the port of Milo, another Greek schooner with 80 men, boarded her a third time; and finding nothing to rob her had refused to submit to the decree for the abolish of, towed her towards the coast of the Morea. We know not to what fate these unfortunate people hensions were entertained that great difficulty would were destined: they would perhaps have paid with their lives the inconceivable patience of the European Governments, which daily emboldens these ardened rebels. Fortunately however for them. the French Admiral's frigate came in sight on the 6th, and with crowded sail hastened to their succour. At Naxo, not being able to obtain the reimbursement of merchandize plundered from vessels of her nation, she was obliged to take on board the Austrian Consul and to fire upon the town: on the next day the Pirates came humbly im-ploring elemency. She recovered at Syra about 150 bales of tobacco, which had been taken by the pirates from an Austrian merchantman."

Several circumstances appeared to corroborate the information given by Capt. Dominique, who arrived in New York several days since, that the Greek fleet had dispersed, and were cruizing separately in search of property. But the subsequent letter from an American gentleman at Smyrna, indicates exceptions to the statement, and that the Greek government did not countenance the

During the next day, an American corvette, (the Erie, Capt. Deacon) came in and having examined the Greek cruizers, immediately released them, they being is search of an Austrian brig, which they suspected had Turkish property on board. "Letters from Corfu, of the 16th of June, bring the following news. The Seraskier, Redschid Pacha, having left a garrison of 2 000 infantry and 500 cavalry in Missoloughi, marched. on the 23d of May, with a corps of 6,000 men, to Lepanto whence he sent his Kiaga Bey against the monastery occupied by the Greeks, situated between Ledoriki and Lepanto. The garrison, which was core and which was very small, surrendered, after a short resistance, and several villages about Salona submitted; hereupon, the Seraskier marched towards Athens.
